Donald,

Laura's disappearance was the perfect set up!

A man saying his name was "Jack" talked to a drug dealer over the phone and tried to hire him to kill a woman that was a police informant. Because she was getting ready to tell on some people.

Then a police informant named Laura disappeared, and her ex-husband's name was Jack!

1/15 An open and shut case for police. They had a motive (child custody), and all they needed to do was come up with a story to convince a jury to convict you guys. The story they came up with was completely impossible, but they still somehow got the jury to convict.

SIM MCLAUGHLIN
Fam has told me that her dad was a smart criminal, and only committed crimes that benefitted himself. He knew Jack and Laura, and somehow knew that they had been disagreeing about their child custody situation. He also knew that she was a "narc" and was getting ready to tell on people.

McLaughlin calling himself "Jack" while trying to find someone to kill Laura would have been a perfect ~~plan~~ ^{Plan}. Got rid of Laura while framing her ex-husband Jack, and kept himself out of trouble. It would have been stupid if McLaughlin would have used his own name while trying to find a hitman.

I reached out to Jack a couple weeks ago but haven't heard back from him. I asked him if he or Laura had ever been friends with McLaughlin, when he heard that Laura was missing, who told him, and I also asked him if him being called into work that night was normal, or if it was out of the ordinary. I wish he would write to me and answer some questions. That could help with the timeline, and help pick apart KPD/the prosecution's story even more.

2 Pg.

I have a lot more to write about, but I'll save that for other letters.

Sincerely,
Cliff Anderson
